and all senators who notify the Speaker of an interest of the committee to which the bill or resolution has been referenced"...something doesn't read right there. Senator...I'm trying to see if I've got this right. In the third sentence...I might not be looking at the third sentence. All right, "for each measure given such status...status, the Speaker, after consultation with the primary introducer and chairperson, and all senators who notify the Speaker of an interest..." So the Speaker before...

SENATOR CROSBY: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...he could schedule this, has to consult with all of the senators who notify the Speaker of an interest. So he's either have to...has to go around to each one of them, or convene a meeting where they are all present, or tell them to trickle in whenever they can do so, but he's got to talk to all of them. He's got to, under this rule, consult with all of them, so that saves time. Does it save time? I don't think so. If ten senators express an interest and notify the Speaker, the Speaker's got to consult with all of them. When is that done? How is it done? And does the Speaker leave the chair if he is presiding when that motion is made, and call all these people together and go someplace and work this out? Or do they take that bill off the agenda and go on with other bills and then when the next bill comes up, that motion has to be made again?

SENATOR CROSBY: Time. Thank you, Senator Chambers. Mr. Clerk.

CLERK: Madam President, items, if I may.

SENATOR CROSBY: Items for the record.

CLERK: (Read LB 1175-1177 by title for the first time.) Madam President, I have...Senator Bruning has selected LB 1176 as his priority bill for the session. And Senator Schrock would like to withdraw his name from 938 as coinroducer; and Senator Hillman withdraw her name from 1114 as coinroducer. And I have a series of prints with respect to proposed rules changes offered by Senators Wesely, Chambers, and Maurstad. (See pages 305-16 of the Legislative
